

James D. Friedman

Retired Partner

Jim had provided legal counsel to clients in very challenging legal, financial and business matters for more than 40 years. Whether the client was a multibillion-dollar, publicly-owned bank holding company, or a community bank or a family business—his clients received responsive, reliable advice to guide them through their legal needs. An NFL quarterback, a banking trade association, a billion dollar family-owned business and an internationally famous auto racetrack had all turned to him for legal advice. Jim had represented clients with diverse businesses including a nationally recognized healthcare system, the independent directors of a Major League Baseball franchise, a German auto parts manufacturer, an educational opportunity foundation and one of America's most recognized Universities, to name a few.

He was well-known for his representation of banks in Wisconsin and for his experience in dealing with federal and state bank regulators. His in-depth knowledge of the banking industry and his creative approach to navigating legal issues had resulted in several first-of-a-kind transactions for his bank clients. Jim's experience allowed him to assemble teams of lawyers to efficiently and successfully handle countless legal matters including business litigation, securities offerings, mergers and acquisitions, labor and employment, tax, employee benefits and more.

As past Chair of the Quarles & Brady Financial Institutions Team and a Director, and past member of the Executive and Audit Committees of the Wisconsin Association of Manufacturers and Commerce (WMC), he understood the increasingly important role directors play in corporate governance. He had represented boards and individual directors in extremely challenging legal and public relations matters - guided them through the sale of an MLB franchise, extricated them from government regulatory enforcement actions, securities class actions and helped them to understand new and complex government rules. He was frequently called upon by reporters as a knowledge resource for comment on industry news.

Generally, his practice included the representation of clients in a vast array of industries such as:

- Financial institutions of all types and sizes and their holding companies, in all aspects of their business, including regulatory, merger and acquisition, corporate and securities matters.
- Manufacturers, service businesses and health care providers in a full array of corporate, transactional and international matters.
- Businesses, boards of directors and independent directors or committees of directors in corporate governance, audit or
