Partner

Jeremy Lite practices throughout Arizona and in Indian Country with a primary focus on environmental law and litigation, including the defense of lawsuits alleging asbestos exposure and environmental contamination. He also advises clients on water rights, state and federal environmental laws, cultural resources, and Tribal law.

His relevant experience includes:

- Representation of potentially responsible parties (PRPs) in CERCLA sites and related litigation, including negotiation and implementation of consent decrees

Defending companies against allegations of asbestos personal injury and other environment-related torts and claims

- Advising clients involved in infrastructure development and energy projects on complying with NEPA, ESA, NHPA, and other governmental approval requirements
- Assisting clients in complying with Arizona water law, and securing the transfer of water rights and wells in connection with farmland, ranches, and other real property transactions in multiple states
- Working with the Bureau of Land Management (BLM), US Forest Service, and state agencies to convey grazing authority on federal and state lands; assisting ranchers in borderland areas in working with US Customs & Border Protection and defending private land rights
- Working with Native American tribal nations to defend their interests in litigation, assist in economic development, and address environmental concerns
- Representing airline jet fuel consortiums in connection with environmental issues and remediation projects at major airports
